KILRATHI PIRACY

Are Kiltrathi raiders and other asymmetric threats the war of the '80s ?

What I am actually trying to explain here, is that our persistence to win this war with the shortcut way could easily have been our inevitable doom, if it wasn't Commodore Blair, off course,

15 YEARS AGO

2663.221: Chief Field Officer of Intelligence and Special Operations in the Enigma sector, Colonel James Taggart in response to the countless acts of espionage and sabotage, invested on the idea of creating a special secret unit based in the Enigma sector with one and only mission; to investigate and collect information about almost every single thing that had to do with Confederation's internal and external affairs but never to intervene. This special unit played a key role on the investigation of Tiger's Claw destruction and the clearing up of several acts of sabotage during the same period, for many of which the responsibility came to be pointed to the "Society of Mandarins". Soon this unit's services expanded to every Confed territory all over the galaxy and it was Admiral Geoffrey Tolwyn's own direct order to turn this unit from a secret service to a combat information center, open for the public, showing to the enemy, foreign or domestic, that nothing can be hidden under the light of the sun. This center is commonly known up until today as "CIC".

and the sacrifices of many other dedicated people with a last chance for success the "Y22A-1 Temblor Bomb" project.

D'sW: So, let me clear this out for our readers, Colonel. What you are explaining, is that if Confed had made in the first hand a good defensive strategic plan we would have won this war anyhow?

Col. Montclair: Not at all my fellow reporter, what I am trying to explain is that we would have greater chances not to lose the war with Kilrathi if our strategy didn't have only one goal; to destroy their home planet (Kilrah).

D'sW: But the original plan was a success, didn't it?

Col. Montclair: Yes and No, I could say. Temblor bomb did manage to put an end to this bloodthirsty war, irrelevant to the 1/500,000 risk ratio that this mission undertook. But please, do tell me if someone could call this winning by reading CNSC's (Confederation Navy Safety Center) latest casualties report.

D'sW: Could you give us a brief idea of this report, Colonel?

Col. Montclair: Let me read you some of the summarized numbers. About 35 years of war with more than 9.5 Trillion of deaths in both sides and more than 300 system economies bankrupt. To be more specific, Confed Navy lost about 30 billion soldiers, more than 350,000 ships per year, achieving the disastrous number of 1.2 quadrillion credits in war casualties. Now, I wouldn't call that much of a winning.

D'sW: In a few days we are closing 9 years since the War have ended. What are CNSC's plans for the time being ?

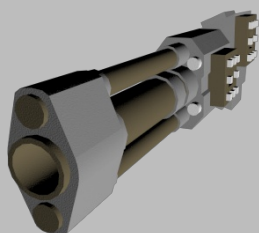

Col. Montclair: Madame, CNSC's focus is one and the same, being or not being on war conflicts. Our only goal is the safety of the Navy's Assets, tangible or intangible. Our new safety program that you gave me the opportunity to explain to your readers with detail in this interview, has been one of the highest priorities for the design of the latest "mega-carrier" project and I am pretty definite that it will provide a fair result with the smallest difficulties during its implementation.
